Reliable miners employed in he camp say that there were between thirty and sixty men in the mine. The regular force numbered eighty, but it is said that about thirty of them went to Trinidad yesterday to take out naturalization papers preparatory to lection. The reason the number at work is not positively known is beause the men were checked off when leaving the mine instead of when go-ing in. The number of dead will not be ascertained until after the mine is thoroughly explored. The men are for-eigners who had been recently im-ported to take the places of strikers,
